AFTER SHOWING

Discussion Items and Questions

1. Today such conveniences as computers, telephones, automobiles, electricity, etc. are used to enhance our modern-day lives. Explain how these enhancements differ from those used during the time the Mid-Atlantic was being discovered. Use this information for the following study points/activities.
2. Imagine what it would be like to be an early explorer. Discuss issues that may have concerned these early settlers: weather conditions, commerce, regional terrain, food/vegetation, dealing with homeland authorities in Britain, France, Spain, etc.
3. Both geographical and historical information have been documented throughout the world. Explain why this type of information is important when studying the Mid-Atlantic region and how it relates to our everyday lives. Furthermore, how do the disciplines of geography and history interact or relate with other areas of study in your school's curriculum?
4. America was founded on many principles originating from the early Mid-Atlantic settlers, i.e., religious freedom. What are those principles, and how do they differ from those originating in other countries throughout history? What impact do these principles have on past and future generations?

Applications and Activities

1. Tensions leading toward the Revolutionary War existed between the early American settlers and the British authorities, i.e., Battle of Trenton. Assemble the students into small groups to negotiate or debate the interests of these two groups. (Similar to discussion point #7 for the Civil War.)

2. Draw a map of the Mid-Atlantic region, indicating significant points of interest. For example, the capital cities, i.e., Trenton, New Jersey; important events, i.e., Battle at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, in 1863; names of early explorers, i.e., Giovanni Da Verrazano, etc.
3. Many battles during the Civil War were fought on the soil of the Mid-Atlantic region. Discuss the issues involved with this conflict and the profiles of the two groups represented in the North and South (the Union and Confederates). Then assemble the students into two groups to have a political debate on the issues. Perhaps have each group nominate a leader to represent President Abraham Lincoln for the Union and President Jefferson Davis for the Confederates.
4. Arrange a trip near your community to visit museums, cultural centers, state parks, etc., to stimulate your imagination to explore the beautiful history and geography of the Mid-Atlantic region.
5. Create a bulletin board time line using the "Chronology of the Mid-Atlantic Region." (See INSTRUCTIONAL GRAPHICS.)
6. Complete the "Mid-Atlantic States and Capital Cities" worksheet. (See INSTRUCTIONAL GRAPHICS.)

SUMMARY

Descendents of the Paleo-Indians, the Algonquian Indians, were the first known inhabitants to occupy this land—the Mid-Atlantic region. Later, the first European settlers, mostly English, Dutch and French, began to explore this region during the early 1600s.

Aboard ships, these early settlers arrived in the Mid-Atlantic region seeking religious and political freedom. Eventually, tensions grew between the new settlers and the British authorities in Europe. Those tensions led to the Revolutionary War in 1775. After the war, the Mid-Atlantic states began to form a Union, which eventually grew and is known today as the United States of America. Later, another war entered the Mid-Atlantic scene. The Civil War became known as the bloodiest war in United States history. Also associated with this region are many significant historical figures like George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Edison and more.

In addition to its rich history, the Mid-Atlantic region also has geographical significance. Located along the shores of the Atlantic Ocean and the Great Lakes, this area is a major seaport for the fishing industry and the importing/exporting of consumer goods.

As we study the Mid-Atlantic region, we begin to understand where we as a nation have been, and how far we have gone—as this region offers us a place of origin, a place of beauty and a place to learn.
